

For her statement: "Editor's Note: Articles in the October 2006 and February 2007 editions of Network News include a woman who was the spouse of Militia of Montana founder John Trochmann at that time. In October 2007, she informed the Network that she has a mental illness, and that her actions during the time addressed in the articles were due in some part to the lack of effective treatment of her illness. She has divorced Trochmann and regrets her participation in these activities and submitted the following written statement:

While questions of race and society are not new to me, I believe those parading as patriots to be mischief makers. Their one common solution to solving any problems facing white people in America and the world involves sending them money. They are all snake oil salesmen. I denounce my involvement with the patriot movement in general, and Stormfront and John Trochmann in particular.

Women, beware the man who attempts to usurp your sovereignty. Remember that women have fought for America, and continue to do so. A true patriot believes in the equal worth of all people. I believe John Trochmann and his kind to be ne'er do wells with their own egoistic agenda. As Montana warns youth against meth, with the "Not Even Once" slogan, I warn you against so-called patriots. When they ask you to lend them an ear, just remember: "Not Even Once".

Thank you for listening.
